It costs a lot to live in New York and many of those who work hardest serving our most vulnerable, like healthcare, homecare, security and childcare workers, earn far less than a living wage.

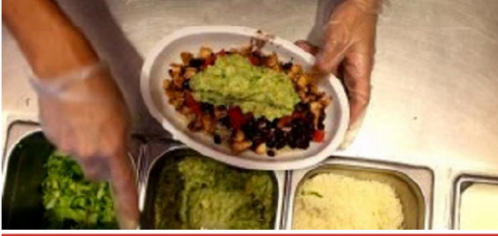

While corporate CEOs are making record pay, the average wage for critically needed hourly workers has stagnated.

Companies keep resisting rules requiring them to disclose how much more their CEOs earn than average workers. So the AFL-CIO is doing the math for them.

USA TODAY

9 CEOs WERE PAID 800 TIMES MORE THAN THEIR WORKERS

The average CEO pay of an S&P 500 company is 216 times that of their median workers. CEOs with the widest pay gaps:

	David Zaslav/Discovery Communications CEO pay: $156.1 million Median worker pay: $68,387	CEO-to-worker pay ratio: 2,282
	Steven Ells/Chipotle $28.9 million $18,980	1,524
	Montgomery Moran/Chipotle $28.2 million $18,980	1,483
	Larry Merlo/CVS Health $32.4 million $30,690	1,054
	Howard Schultz/Starbucks $21.5 million $21,600	994
	Brian Cornell/Target $28.2 million $33,420	843
	Les Moonves/CBS $57.2 million $69,951	817
	Robert Marcus/Time Warner Cable $34.6 million $42,881	807
	Douglas McMillon/Walmart $19.4 million $24,100	804

By raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour, we can ensure that hard-working New Yorkers can afford to live in the state and provide the services we all value.

Workers across the country have mobilized to raise the minimum wage and, supported by customers who patronize businesses that treat their workers fairly, they're already seeing progress.

Organized labor won an important victory Tuesday when the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors voted to increase the minimum wage to $15, but it now faces a more daunting political challenge: convincing other local governments to join the movement.

The faces of minimum wage

We have an obligation to the workers of New York to do the same here.

All across our state, 95% of New Yorkers believe it's important to provide workers a living wage, and six out of ten support raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour statewide.
